Chemung Canal Trust Company Launches Private Banking Services

Chemung Canal Trust Company (CCTC) today announced that its Trust and Investment Division has expanded its menu of services to now include Private Banking. Chemung Canal also announced that J. Edmond Morton, IV, a 1993 Cornell University graduate, has been hired to manage this new service.

“Private Banking is a natural expansion of the services currently being offered by our experienced banking and investment professionals,” said Ronald M. Bentley, President & CEO of Chemung Canal Trust Company. “We have created a seamlessly coordinated approach to handling all of our high net worth client’s financial needs through one point of contact, our Private Banker,” Bentley said.

“We are pleased that Ed Morton has returned to the Southern Tier to lead this effort,” Bentley added, “with more than a decade of private banking experience, Ed has helped us develop products and services that will enhance the relationship between Chemung Canal and our private banking clients.”

A native of Owego, Morton is a graduate of Owego Free Academy and Cornell University. With more than 15 years of experience in the financial services industry, Morton has spent the last decade focusing on private banking and wealth management in the Philadelphia area while employed at Mellon Bank, Bank of America, Sovereign Bank and The Bancorp Bank.

“It has been very exciting to return to the area and have the opportunity to help create this new service from the ground up,” Morton said. “I am proud to be associated with an institution like Chemung Canal, who is progressive in striving to create new ways to meet the ever growing needs of our clients, while staying true to our core values of providing the highest degree of quality customer service,” he added.
